On December 1 hog and pig numbers were up 27 percent over a year earlier. Nationally swine numbers are up 11 percent.

These increases are responsible for lower prices in recent months. For three years pig production in Virginia has been fairly constant at about 770 thousand. In 1979 the number jumped to over a million--39% increase in one year.

The drop in hog prices caused a 26% reduction in the average value of hogs and pigs. Hogs have traditionally cycled every five to six years. This cycle is no different.

Several years ago we introduced hybrid dark tobacco in this county. Several growers found that it produced well for them. Then we went a couple of years with no seed produced.

Those who are interested will find seed available this year. A seed producer in Prince Edward County made seed in 1979.

This hybrid is a male sterile Virginia 331 crossed with Virginia 312.

The hybrid has moderate resistance to Black Root Rot, low resistance to Black Shank and high resistance to mosaic.

We'll have the biggest bull sale ever held at the Red House Bull Evaluation Center on January 26. Sale starts at noon. Plan to be there. There will be offered a total of 87 bulls as follows: 35 angus, 37 polled hereford, 10 simmental, 2 charolais, 2 red angus and 1 horned hereford.

The top selling bull gained 4.42 pounds a day--this gives you an idea of the quality of cattle being offered.

If you haven't mulched the strawberries, better get it done. There's still some cold weather ahead and it will keep the berries clean come harvest time.

* * *

A winter mulch is also a safeguard to plants around the home. A good mulch prevents the alternate freezing and thawing of the soil that commonly occurs during the late winter and spring months.

Wood chips are possibly as good as you'll find, and usually they are fairly cheap.

Landscape design course offered for gardeners

Appomattox gardeners interested in landscape design take note: "Landscape Design Course I", the first of a series of four courses, will be offered at the Mount Vernon Motel, Charlottesville, Jan. 21-24.

The series deals with the development of outdoor spaces around the home and community in order to make the surroundings more beautiful, more useful and easier to maintain.

James A. Faisst, extension specialist, landscape design at Virginia Tech and coordinator for the course, says the course is open to the public and will be especially helpful to nurserymen, grounds superintendents, garden club leaders, extension agents and others who work in the areas of landscape horticulture and will be extremely helpful to individual homeowners in finding solutions to their landscape problems.

Cost of the course is $25. For those garden club members who must take the examination, there will be an additional fee of $2 for the exam.

For further information, contact Mrs. Thomas C. Fields, Rt. 1, Box 166, Trevilians, Va. 23170, or James A. Faisst, Dept. of Horticulture, Virginia Tech, Blacksburg, Va. 24061.

Towels have history all their own

The terry cloth towel, that bathroom basic, has an interesting past and a colorful present. It also is on sale now. You will see sales called White Sales, White and Bright Sales and Colorful Linen Sales. Whatever the name, remember a bargain is not a bargain unless you need it and can use it.

Towels truly do have an interesting history. Though it is not known exactly when terry towels originated, excavations in Egypt have turned up samples of linen terry dating back to 2000 B.C. The reference to terry cloth as Turkish towels is derived from 17th Century Turkey. The forerunner to the modern towel was created by harem women who made loops and a decorative pattern by hand-picking threads on a loose cloth.

About 1850 an English businessman travelling in Turkey saw the looped cloth. Together with an expert weaver and mechanic, they solved the problem of cotton terry weaving on a loom, thus creating the terry towel as we know it today.

Technology has brought about many improvements in the complicated process of making terry cloth. Today beautiful colors and patterns, the choices of sizes and constructions, plus built-in easy care, make towels both practical and a focal decorating point.

Many factors should be considered in towel selection. Some of these factors are: Who will use it, color, size, weight, texture and construction.

There are several towel sizes and weights. A larger person may prefer a big bath sheet with thick, absorbent loops. A child may best handle a smaller, lighter towel. Texture is also a personal decision. Soft towels provide gentle drying, while tougher textures give brisk rub-downs.

Color itself is important. It is easy to mix and match solid color towels with wallpaper and shower curtain prints. Most popular are the earth tones and deeper shades, but beware of the deeper shades. Many times the dark colors have to be washed separately. If you are trying to save energy and time, you may have to settle for a lighter shade towel or one that does not create a separate washing situation. One of the newest decorating trends is for the dusty tones to coordinate with dark colors.

As recently as a decade ago, prints in all cotton were most popular. Now cotton and polyester blends in solids are the top choice, with jacquards following and prints used as coordinates. There is an increased interest in embellished towels as well. We also find that these are much more expensive than the others on the market.

The addition of polyester fibers make towels stronger, longer lasting and more shrink resistant. The same absorbency as all cotton is maintained by using polyester in the base or warp, not the loops which are the drying surface. There is, however, renewed interest by consumers in all cotton towels.

When purchasing towels, it is helpful to know something about the construction and weave. All loop terry on both sides is generally considered to be more absorbent. Sheared terry, looped on one side and velour on the other has more sheen and an extra soft feel. The longer the loops and more closely plaited, the more absorbent the towel.

Softness, but not absorbency, is affected by the fineness of the yarn. Fly yarn, two single strands twisted together, may be used for added strength. We also pay more for towels like this.

The selvage should be firm and closely woven since the signs of wear appear in this area first. Hems should be sewn with small firm, close stitches and backstitched at corners. Examine the closeness and evenness of the ground weave, the basis of durability, by holding a towel up to the light.

Plain terry is the simplest weave. Ribbed towels can be woven with alternating stripes of terry and plain through the length of the towel. More elaborate designs can be woven in different colors on a jacquarded loom. Reversible towels sport a pattern which appears in a different color on each side. Embellished towels are usually plain, solid color, with some form of banding, border or centered applique.

For longer wear and continued bright look, launder according to instructions on the care label. Wash towels frequently before dirt and grime become embedded in the fibers.

Sort towels into dark and light colored loads. Towels that have a white background with pastel stripes, print designs and checks are generally considered to be white. New deep toned or bright towels should be washed separately several times to remove excess dye without affecting the other colored items.

To prevent lint transfer when laundering towels, separate towels which are lint givers from lint attractors such as perma-press and synthetic fiber items. Some towels, particularly new ones, shed more lint than others.

Avoid overloading the washer or dryer. Towels should move about freely for best cleaning. Also it is wise to mix large and small items in a regular load together for better washing and drying. For example, instead of washing a load of towels, combine some towels with two or three sheets, pillow cases or underwear.

Towels have a romantic history. They have become a beautiful product of technology in both an assortment of colors, sizes and styles to suit every need. Keep towels bright, absorbent and looking like new with frequent and proper laundering. Also repair any hems that may come loose with washing and frequent use. It is not what we have, but it's how we take care of what we do have that really counts when we are trying to save dollars.

Jones named extension district chairman

C. Clark Jones has been appointed to a three-year term as district chairman of the East Central District, Virginia Cooperative Extension Service, in Appomattox, according to a release from the Extension Information Office.

Charles R. Perkins has left the Appomattox district to become an extension district chairman in the Southeast District, at Windsor. He had served in the local district as an extension agent.

Mary H. McCoy has been named to the East Central District office at Appomattox, as leader for program development and staff orientation.

The moves, which were effective Jan. 1, come in the wake of a statewide extension service reorganizational effort.

William R. Van Dresser, dean of Virginia Tech's Extension Division, said the reorganization will strengthen local programs by decentralizing decision-making responsibilities.

He said the reorganization will also provide for specific points of accountability. As part of the change, the new worker orintation, program evaluation and program development will be strengthened. The net result, he said, will be greater local input and more responsive extension programs around the state.

C. Clark Jones comes to Appomattox having served with the extension service since 1971. He has baccalaureate, masters and doctoral degrees from North Carolina State. Prior to joining the Southeast District, he served in the extension service's Northeast District office in Richmond.

Before that, he served as program associate and associate director of Donaldson Brown Center for continuing Education at Virginia Tech.

Charles Perkins, a 16-year veteran of Extension service, has a B. S. and doctorate from Virginia Tech and a master's degree from North Carolina State. He served as a program leader in the Northeast District and area agent as well as an Extension Agent in King William County prior to coming in Appomattox in 1970.
